Andrew Curran is an associate in the firm's Banking & Financial Services practice group. Andrew focuses his practice on commercial real estate law, including financing and securitization, acquisition, and disposition of real property. He represents banks, credit unions, and other lenders in connection with real estate financing transactions across major U.S. markets. Andrew frequently leads negotiations on transactions involving mixed-use, multifamily, condominium, and co-operative property. In addition to advising lenders and guiding clients through the nuances of each transaction, Andrew routinely drafts all conventional loan documentation from origination through closing.

Andrew also represents borrowers, sellers and purchasers in connection with their real estate investments and corporate needs by negotiating security agreements, purchase agreements, and various corporate formation agreements.
