Program Description:

Claims arising from workplace injuries can require careful coordination of defense between the workers' compensation claim and the general liability claim. This is commonly seen, for example, under New York Labor Law claims. Learn how a cooperative and unified defense focused on global resolution can lead to huge savings.

About Cullen and Dykman's Construction Litigation Department

The attorneys in our Construction Litigation department have a long history of representing clients in all phases of construction projects, from contract negotiations and financing transactions to management claims, arbitration, and litigation. In fact, the Brooklyn Bridge owes its famous profile to one of the firm's founding partners who chaired the group that selected John Roebling's world-renowned design. The Construction Litigation department at Cullen and Dykman is a "full-service" construction group under any interpretation of the phrase "full-service". We handle all aspects of large-scale construction projects with ease, from front-end contract drafting and planning to litigation involving construction delay and defect claims, personal injury and professional liability matters, breach of contract, and bankruptcies and reorganizations. We staff all construction and coverage disputes with a streamlined team based on case need with oversight from our experienced team of partners, each of whom has well over 30 years of experience in high-stakes construction planning and litigation. We are efficient problem solvers first and foremost. No matter what the issue may be, there is a focused, mindful solution waiting for each of our clients.
